

4 July 1809

I feel quite ashamed of blaming you there with my eternal father but I know you will forgive me as it is often a subject we are both in common upon You may be very very sure I am & so that you as it may I am more and of the children of my best friend & best because if I did not love them I wish them well I should not have written so freely my mind to them; a proof of my feeling in his presence I leave you for if you had been with you will see she was I know you were & after you had written for my health sake but perhaps I shall have visited them; I had imagined to send her a commission & therefore I determined to write some not thinking upon this and subject but expressing my opinion that she had been I visited me as she was in all cases find me the same time friend; that I had written to her as well I was friend after a very long time that she would have me a little think I was wrong. That I committed being incapable of helping them because I could do nothing - I am I do not say and you may be certain it was neither in charge in me I am sure of my opinion about the L. I. I.

was confident that she is so well inclined towards them that she would be kind and keep it to herself; but when it is spoken to her; I will be what you wish about it but then that may be taking impossibilities and it would be better for somebody to be commissioned to do it; but if you think I can pave the way by stating the exact truth to her I am ready for that is nothing I would not do for them and my only to save me heart - I hope I am here not here as the judge in the room is the wife of the Countess - If I speak to the D. I must make her sensible that she must enforce and insist on the Salary being equally di: vided and that it is in giving idea some which is the fact to the D. as they are first Anne's husband - I can just say that to every one: if you think it had better be : more quiet till we must be out of place possibly to mention this; if you wish me to do me say any thing to the D. if ever you will let me know I in the room there all will remain very with me - God bless you & believe me ever your truly friend
