

AA

Jan. 23 1812

My Dearest Brother

I am commended by the Queen to inform you that being much desirous to meet with your wishes in consequence of a Message she received from you by Frederick, she sent immediately for Mr Taylor and communicated to him the purport upon which she was to write - and equally desirous of being very clear and explicit she desired him to write the letter for her - she could have expected that she would had a bad headache - and therefore hopes you will excuse her only having signed the letter and sent to you - so far I have executed her commands - Now I think it candid and due to you to tell you that she mentioned the subject to us after dinner - but not one word till Mr Taylor brought her the letters to sign - and she then expressed herself with great satisfaction at Mr Perceval not having written to her, saying. He wrote to me last year when he felt himself embarrassed, &

AA

Jan. 23 1812

"annoyed him in any handsome terms, there
 "for it was an attention he ought to have had
 "know — and I put it away much" — He then asked my sister and myself if we did not think so. I said that it appeared to me him your servant it was more delicate & proper in Mr Percival to speak to you upon the subject, and that I made no doubt he had written last year previous to your being Duport. He looked very steadily at me and said with a kind of suppressed anger "that maybe, but still I think I ought to have been addressed straight to myself." — There were her words. Since the letter has been signed she has been very cheerful & good humoured so that I hope tomorrow she will have forgot all this phantom of indignity
 I am happy to hear you are better. Sir Henry's health has given me a very comfortable account of you — the King has passed a more quiet day but little too

Henry and Doctor John say he is considerably more weak than at any period of his long and sad illness God bless you my dearest Brother Ever your most truly affectionate & grateful Sister

Augusta

Jan. 23 - 1812

AA

Jan. 23 1812

"annoyed him in any handsome terms, there
 "for it was an attention he ought to have had
 "know — and I put it away much" — He then
 asked my sister and myself if we did not think
 so. I said that it appeared to me him your servant it was more delicate & proper in Mr Percival to speak to you upon the subject, and
 that I made no doubt he had written last year previous to your being Duport. He looked very
 steadily at me and said with a kind of suppressed
 anger "that maybe, but still I think I ought
 to have been addressed straight to myself." There were her words. Since the letter has been signed
 she has been very cheerful & good humoured so
 that I hope tomorrow she will have forgot all this
phantom of indignity
 I am happy to hear you are better. Sir Henry's health has given me a very comfortable account of you the King has passed a more quiet day but little for

Henry and Doctor John say he is considerably more
 weak than at any period of his long and sad illness
 God bless you my dearest Brother
 Ever your most truly affectionate & grateful
 Sister

Augusta

Jan. 23 - 1812

Princess Augusta
to
The Prince Regent

Jan^y 23rd 1812

Dissatisfaction of Her Majesty at the supposed inattention of Mr.
Perceval