

Dear William

I take the earliest opportunity of thanking you for your last affectionate letter, and acquainting you with our safe arrival here. I am happy to find that you are upon better terms with 'Bude', and only hope that you will continue so, as she is certainly much better and more agreeable for you both. During the time I was at Munich I had a little feverish cold which did not the least confine me at home, It is now totally over. I have found a great many English here, who were to stay here for the Camp among the rest many of those poor Prussians We have passed through one of the most beautiful countries I ever saw in my life, But the Heat has been intolerable indeed I believe it was that which gave me the fever.

I have not time to add more except to beg you will give my best compliments to all friends at Home and that you will believe me most sincerely ever

Dear William

Your most affectionate
