

To Duke of Cambridge

April 25th 1819

My beloved Elizabeth

I cannot express the joy I feel Your happiness and the health and the health my love so well. How kind of you my dear sweet to write soon. I thank you for it with all my heart and pray God that and every other blessing may come down to you as most truly deserving it.

I am so very glad and disappointed at your illness but trust in God's mercy that Elizabeth may find they are happy and William is so warmly attached to her that it would be a sad thing to see Public Displeasure. He has written me a letter which does the greatest honour to both his head and his heart Excellent. He speaks with much feeling of his dear parentage - but looks entirely and solely to the return of his beloved little wife. I am ever your affectionate & devoted
 Father

To Duke of Cambridge

to all to say to you in my next letter - I am then alarmed on my march - but I am to say there are some favorable accounts that I do -

Everybody is delighted here about your son my dear Adolphus I am very happy myself that I can give to us him and give him my blessing - but that I do with all my heart & soul though at a distance. My dear daughter too her delight it will be - indeed I am truly anxious and interested about you all my dear children - I am extremely with Edward quite in a state of joy for his return like a father and mother

I must conclude here leaving myself to write to you God bless you I am your affectionate father
My wife

My best love to the Duke and the rest of the family
